PEAK CONSTRUCTION CORPORATION....

Still Doing The Right Thing - One Year Later

One year ago, PEAK Construction Corporation, along with each person and entity across the globe, was staring down an unknown road of uncertainty with the advent of Covid-19. At that time PEAK relayed that, above all, our Company's primary concern was for "the health, safety and well-being of our employees, their families, our clients and business partners." While PEAK was confident to weather the crisis ahead, no one could fully grasp all that was about to unfold.

For years prior to 2020, PEAK had been strategically incorporating forward-thinking, efficient and cutting-edge products into our everyday business with the understanding and belief in delivering top-quality projects at the speed of today's construction technology. The upgrades and processes we implemented preceding the pandemic allowed PEAK to transition seamlessly and effectively continue conducting business throughout the past year.

PEAK's commitment to technology and thorough embrace of out-of-the-box thinking and cooperation with our clients, subcontractors and, especially, municipalities and regulatory agencies kept projects on track. As stated by PEAK's CEO, Michael P. Sullivan, Jr., in Chicago Industrial Properties' March 2021 article, "I've been amazed at how resilient the communities we've dealt in have been able to adapt to zoom and remote technology." And, while PEAK is humbled by its success, we will continue to have our hands firmly on the steering wheel to service our clients and the numerous projects throughout our continually expanding market presence. We look back over the past year appreciating all the difficult challenges and welcome the evolutionary progress resulting from those changes, including continuously implementing leading-edge technologies to pivot for the future needs of our clients and continue to successfully navigate unknown challenges.
